GREEDY FOR GOLD.

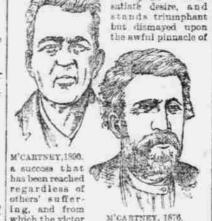

Men Who Sweep All Scruples ance he imposed upon the credulity of these who trusted him. Now, with his from Their Path.

FORCING FORTUNE'S PAYORS.

One Adventurer Is Now Dying in a Penitentiary, Another Is in Custody, a Third Is a Fugitive and a Fourth Lies Slain by His Own Hand,

Stronger than the love of woman, flercer than the desire of the man-eating tiger, mightler than the whirling fury of the cyclone is the nover satisfied thirst of that rapacions portion of the human race whose thirst is the thirst for gold. Long ages have passed since King Mides had his wish, and felt the yellow wine within the royal beaker turn to molten metal at the touch of his charmed and cursed lips. He had attained his utmost desire; a willing god had granted his request; riches beyond the most tremendous dreams of avarice displayed themselves beneath the magic of its merest touch. Yet his life was anguish, and his death fantastic in the terror of its

The tale is world old but ever new-this tale of men who have struggled along de vious and desperate pathways to secure the nst power that wealth alone can give. Some have sought the fields of speculation and climbed to prosperity with pitiless glee over the wrecked fortunes of their less ucky but equally culpable comrades. Others have tolled and saved and hoarded starved their bodies, impoverished their minds and viewed only, glimmering through the darkness of their mental and BISHOP WM. HARRY S. MANSPIELD. Take, for example, the case of Peta Mertney, who is gasping out the last days of his life in the Ohio ponitentiary. Probably no man in the United States has had a bester general education or has made a more thorough study of the principles of engraving. He is a skillful chemist, an expert manufacturer of the finest of artists' tools, and possesses a remarkable knowledge of the manuer is which paper used for bond or monetary purposes made. Yet for forty years this singularly gifted man has devoted all his energies, education arai special skill to the uttering of counter(est currency. His illicit enterprises, undertaken with a desire to accumulate a fortune at the expense of others, have brought him, on the whole, nothing but merited disaster, and now old, penniless and focsaken, the furnous king of American counterfeiters lies dying within the frowning walls of a priso He is but one, however, of the many who have defied the law and found that the law s more powerful than criminal logenuity. large sums of money passed through bis hands, an opportunity presented fixelf and the greed for gold swept away the barrier of principle as a smoden summer torrent bears down before its resistless fury the frail obstruction of the filmsy dam. He must in his pouset so,000 or the company's money, fiel to Canada and with the stolen cash started a business enterprise in Lonon, which had just begun to prosper when detectives swooped down upon him and parried the amsteur in crime back to Kansas to answer for his sine. Like McCartney and Manafield, Seymour Risch might have prospered along the ordinary lines of honest calcaptuse. He was well known and liked in the business and social circles of Chibago, and had achieved a respectable repulation, both as a lawyer and a journalist. Cliques wifilingly intrusted him with their courses, and the newspupers received his contributions with telligent application would have made him a rich man, but he preferred to reach affluence by the short cut of fraud. As an attorney he swindled widows and orphans; as a newspaper man he abused the confi-dence of his associates, and as an acquaint-fugitive from justice. The cases cited above are serrowful to contemplate, but probably none of the three can equal in horror of detail that of the Kausus City/miser, Peter Leffer. This miserable old man had lived out the allotted tale of threescore and ten years. His early history is obscure, but for the last quarter of a century he bad kept a small store on North Third street. He dwelt alone in a miserable hovel. Outside of business hours he shunned his fellow man and he was regarded by his neighbors as a poor unfortunate whose scanty income from trade brought him the bare necessities of life. But the outcome shows that he like the others was a victim of the awful and relentless thirst for gold. He had toiled and saved, and spared himself in no direction that he might add to his store of shining metal. At the age of 70, alone, friendless, unattended, he first saw the hollowness of his life's ambition, and locking up his little sloop sought the filthy back room in which he had spent so many solitary nights and ended his dreary life with a shot from a revolver.

So meager was his patronage that days passed before the poor wretch's tragic end was known. When found he sat dead in a chair. A frightful hole marked the mid-dle of his forehead. He was naked above the waist. His false teeth, says The Kan-sas City Times, protruded several inches from the mouth. The nose had rotted and sunk into the skull, leaving only a deep indentation, and maggots were worming themselves in and out of the apertures in his face. He was thought to be a pauper, but in the cellar was found a bag of gold pieces. In a drawer lay a bank book showing a large sum to his credit, and notes given by responsible parties for hundreds of dollars. The till also contained a handsome sum of money.

In addition to these was found a will by the provisions of which small fortunes were left to five persons living in Baden, Germany, and two other people resident in Kansas City. The old man directed that after the payment of these bequests and a magnificent disbursement for his funeral the residue of his estate should be turned over to the Young Men's Christian associa ion of Kansas City, with the exception of his stock of goods, which he bequeathed to an old cripple named William Taylor.

Viewed in all its aspects can it be said that there is one redceming feature to brighten the somber history of the world old inordinate greed for gold! FRED. C. DATTON.

A Strange Anonymous Letter Claude Rosaire lived with a French Canadian family in southern Michigan until he was 33 years old and believed himself a In a moment of anger three years ago his supposed father declared that Claude was an illegitimate son. This so hurt the young man that he ran away to Chicago. He has not seen the family since. The other day he received an anonymous letter stating that his grandmother was the Duchesse de Saint Al-laize, of Normandia, who fiel from a cruel husband to America with her only child. This child eventually matried a Confederate soldier, Claude being born to them a year or two afterwent. Another woman (the writer of the letter; loved the husband, and in her anger stole the child. The father, in despair over the loss, committed suicide; the mother has disappeared. Inclosed in the anonymous letter to Claude was the certificate of his father's and mother's marriage.

A Ludierous Mistake. A lauguable incident recently occurred at Fort Fairfield. A young men at one of the hotels went to a magistrate and informed him that he wished to be married, and that he would be around in a short time with his lady. The justice informed his wife of what was to happen, that every thing might be in readiness. In a short time a young gentleman, accompanied by a young lady, called into the store of the aforestid metren, and as they appeared somewhat bashful the justice's better half supposed they were the couple who wished to be made one, so she insited them into the dining room, and placing a couple of chairs quite near togethur bade them be seated. Very soon the justice appeared upon the scene, with book in hand, and immediately began to read the marriage service. The roung man grow very red in the face, and springing to his feet demand-ed: "What in thunder does all this mean?" "Why," said the magnitude, I am going to marry you." "But," said the young fol-low, "I don't want to got married," and he and his oir! made a bold strike for the door. leaving the justice in a stuper.
